Career Prospects

It is not a vocational programme. It does not provide special work training. Rather, with a strong interdisciplinary approach of studies, the Programme:

- trains students' creative, synthesising, disciplined, respectful and ethical minds;
- develops and sharpens students' bilingual skills and sensibilities;
- equips students with substantial cultural literacy, creative arts knowledge and transferable abilities, such as writing and presentation skills, creative and critical thinking, and sensitivity to cultural diversity.

These abilities are essential for students' future career in our cultural industry in a great variety of fields, such as journalism, print media, creative industries, art administration, electronic media, management, public relations and education.
